Week in Review:

This week I had a major setback with my subscription to Adobe. I thought it would have been cleared up sooner than this. So I did what I could on paper with my logo, which included a word dump and sketches. I did a lot of research on logos this week and I'm really excited to get started on my logo in Illustrator. I am having a lot of trouble with CodeAcademy online so I am going to start fresh with another code learning site and hopefully I can get some better results. So my next steps are to get started on my logo and find and complete a new online programming course for java and html/Css. I also completed the Career Research part of the course since I did not have Adobe.